Latin America and the Caribbean contributes less than 10% of total greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions, mostly from the energy sector, agriculture and land use change.

Progress towards fulfillment of the Paris Agreement requires decarbonization of the economies.

Investment in renewable energies and electromobility are key elements of the environmental big push.

The region has great potential in hydroelectric, wind, solar and geothermal energy.